Poets House and Port Authority of NY & NJ Collaborate to Create Along These Lines to Bring Poetry to Commuters

New York, NY, May 9, 2011 2011 — Along These Lines, a new public partnership between Poets House and the Port Authority of New York & New Jersey, is bringing poetry to millions of commuters every day.

Poets House and the Port Authority of New York & New Jersey have unveiled an ongoing partnership on a public literary program of poems focused on travel and motion posted throughout the PATH train and station system. Through this partnership, Poets House will introduce poetry to millions of daily commuters, tourists, and people previously unfamiliar with poetry. The program began with four poems one in a PATH station, two in train cars and one on a PATHVISION screen (the TV screens in each PATH car that run news, weather and service updates). Currently, there are a total of ten poems. Every three months, four new poems will be posted.

The first four poems being posted throughout the PATH system include "Cities of the Morning" by Muriel Rukeyser, "Passing Through: A Haiku Sequence," by Cor van den Heuvel, "Siesta in Xbalba" by Allen Ginsberg and "Horizon Blues" by David Henderson. These highly diverse poems are intended to reflect the broad range of the commuters' experiences and interests.

"As commuters see various poems throughout their busy days, it is our hope that they not only make a discovery in language that they can carry throughout their daily travels, but that they will also become aware that there is a wellspring of poetry resources available to them at Poets House," said Poets House Executive Director Lee Briccetti. "Poets House is free and open to the public and we have one of the most extensive collections of poetry in the country."
